Local Naturalist has made the Shortlist for the 2017 UK Awards for Biological Recording and Information Sharing

Adrian Norris, 74, from Leeds, West Yorkshire, has been shortlisted in the 'Gilbert White Adult Award for terrestrial and freshwater wildlife' category of the 2017 UK Awards for Biological Recording and Information Sharing.

These annual awards started in 2015, and have been developed by the National Biodiversity Network, the National Forum for Biological Recording and the Biological Records Centre. Their intention is to recognise and celebrate the outstanding contributions made to biological recording by adults and young people, which is helping to improve our understanding of the UK's wildlife.

Adrian Norris says:

"My motivation for recording molluscs as a volunteer for over 50 years is that I passionately believe that all records belong to everyone. I want biological data to be used by all kinds of people from young naturalists to academics to conservationists and developers.

"I am especially excited by recording the changes in the distribution of slugs and snails since becoming the County Recorder in the spring of 1967. I am fascinated by the arrival of new species into new areas and equally interested in the disappearance of species which used to occur in particular places, not only within Yorkshire, but also nationally in my role as National Recorder for the Conchological Society of Great Britain and Ireland."

The winners of the 2017 UK Awards for Biological Recording and Information Sharing will be announced at a special ceremony on Thursday 16 November during the National Biodiversity Network's annual conference in Cardiff.

This year we are indebted to three organisations for their support:

3. Gilbert White (1720 – 1793) is remembered in these awards because his name is synonymous with biological recording. He transformed the way we look at the natural world and is recognised as one of the fathers of ecology.
